Synopsis: "You" and "Me" are identical twins studying in middle school. They are mirror images of each other, most people can't tell them apart. The only distinguishable feature is that Me has a tiny mole under her eye. The twins use their resemblance to their advantage whether it be taking turns eating buffets for the price of one, paying for one seat at a movie but sitting in two, or taking each other's phone calls from boys they don't fancy. You and Me are so close to one another to the point that they share every aspect of life with each other. One day, when Me takes the place of You for a remedial exam, she comes across a boy named "Mark". They fall for each other. However, Mark misunderstands that the girl he has feelings for is named You. You and Me spend their school break with their grandmother in the Isan region. You wants to take a pin (Isan guitar) lesson, but Me doesn't want to. So, You attends the class by herself. There, she meets Mark who believes she is the girl he met at the remedial exam. Mark makes a move on You who starts having feelings for him as well. When the twins are confronted with their "first love which is not shareable" unlike everything else. How will this internal conflict lead the twins into a new phase of their life?
